CEERI Global Journal

Number 2:

International Peace and Security in the 21st Century

About CEERI Global Journal

CEERI Global Journal, from its fundamental bases, aims to promote scientific research and disseminate knowledge related to the different areas of study of International Relations and related sciences, as well as the linkage between such knowledge and professional practice. To do so, an innovative format that includes digitized information, through the use of computing tools and novel ways of advertising, will be promoted. The objectives are as follows:

1. Publish original academic articles, essays, book reviews, interviews, updating of topics and ongoing or completed research.
2. Form an open and participatory epistemic community of International Relations.
3. Promote the dissemination of academic research and studies carried out by a wide range of participants, including students, academics and professionals.
4. To foster the association between experts, students and professionals in the field of International Relations.

Frequency of Publication

CEERI Global Journal is published twice a year, at the end of each semester.

Open Access Policy

This journal provides immediate open access to its content under the principle that making research freely available to the public promotes a greater exchange of global knowledge.

Editorial Policy

CEERI Global Journal is a biannual publication of the Center for Strategic Studies of International Relations. It publishes academic articles previously submitted to external and objective arbitration in order to reach a level of excellence. These cover a wide range of issues related to security, the environment, economics, law, and politics, among others; and are evaluated according to their originality, the contribution they make to the field of International Relations and their theoretical and empirical consistency. Contributions from disciplinary perspectives different from International Relations are considered as well, as it is understood that the transformation processes the world is currently undergoing require a transdisciplinary and creative approach.

Also published are research studies completed by CEERI's Thematic Areas of Study that the Editorial Committee considers relevant. Lastly, the written reflections by Honorary Guests will be convened by the Editorial Committee, especially for each issue.

Our journal is aimed at all the interested public in the main areas of International Relations.

- Scope of the Call

The end of the Cold War predicted a safer and more peaceful world on the basis of the United States hegemony, the expansion of capitalism and the predominance of western values. However, in the post-Cold War world, new threats to international security appeared, characterized by the emergence of identity claims (especially religious and linguistic), their networking and their non-state nature. At the same time, traditional security threats such as nuclear proliferation, territorial disputes and the arms race remain in force.

Furthermore, the contemporary security context, marked by advances in computing and new technologies, gives form to cybersecurity, the development of robotics and artificial intelligence, and ballistic missiles, among others. Added to this are new perceptions about human security, such as threats associated with the consequences of climate change and gender issues. Thus, security in the 21st century is a manifestation of dynamics in which global and local, national and international events, changes and continuities overlap. In this manner, presentation of papers on the following are invited:

- New threats to international security;
- Geopolitical disputes;
